Curious Muddle Caused by Putting Five Men on Trial at the Same Time.

The concurrent trials of two police captains and three former precinct detectives, with all their complications were resumed before President Martin and Commissioners Murray, Sheehar and Kerwin, at Headquarters, this

Trying five defendants all together is a novel proceeding, and were it done by a court of law without the consent of the accused it would result in a failure, for it would be contrary to law.

But in the cases now on trial the two captains and three ex-ward men are not co-defendants. Capt. Devery and his old ward man, Edward Glennon, are charged with one set of of-fenses Johntly; Capt. Gross and his ex-ward man, George Smith, are charged with an entirely different set of offenses jointly.

Patrolman James Burns is charged with a third and entirely different set of offenses, alleged to have been committed while he was ward man under Capt. McLaughlin in the Eldridge

The Commissioners avoid the question of whether they have the right to try the five together against their demand for separate trials by swearing each witness five times, once against each defendant, and announcing the suspension of one trial temporarily at the taking up of another trial—and this is a method never before heard of, and one which would not be telegrated in a court.

Found Feeble, Hungry and in Rags with His Wife on Park Row.

Supt. Blake, of the Bureau of Charities and Correction, had a puzzle to-day over the disposition of two of the most picturesque outcasts and abjectly wretched mortals that have ever been thrown upon the bounty of this city. A policeman in Park Row last night found a feeble old man and a woman roughing in a doorway amid a tumbled pile of old bags and values. The man was apparently just recovering from a

Street Hospital and transferred thence There the old man made the statement in a befogged and disconnected way that he was John Unlicher, a native of Switserland, ninety-eight years old, and had been in America for fifty-eight years. The woman said whe was his wife, Mandy, a native of New York State, and did not know her age.

She appeared to be about forty-five years old, and was as queer a freak of womanhood as whimsical nature and the rough roads of this life ever conspired to produce. Misery could not be burlesqued into a more fantastic guise, and a glance at her extorted a laugh before the pity of her plight gould be felt.

well known that in his last campaigns the Emperor made levies that "robbed the cracile and the grave," by enlisting boys and old men in his depleted regiments, and that Switzerland, and almost all of Western Europe, in fact, were contributory to his armies.

The old man did not say that he had seen Napoleon in person, and while he could not recollect the names of the actions, he remembered well and apparently with much pride that he had fought for the great Kaiser.

Later in the day Mr. Blake, after ascertaining all he could from them, concluded that it would be unfair to charge them to any country. He believed they roamed about from one to another, and that no country owned them. He therefore, decided that they were State paupers and sent them to the Flatbush Almshouse, which receives a portion of the State appropriation for paupers who are not a charge on any country.

This was two hours after the time set by Miss Neill's employer for her to return home, and the young woman knew she would be locked out. Brown suggested that Miss Neill go to a hotel, while he went home. This she would not consent to, so it was decided to go to take them to a minister.
